The keeper climbed the stair each evening with the same slow care, counting the steps under his breath as his father had done before him.